

THIRTEENTH REGIMENT NEW HAMPSHIRE VOLUNTEER INFANTRY.

(THREE YEARS.)

By S. MILLETT THOMPSON, late Second Lieutenant Thirteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and Historian of the Regiment.

THIS regiment volunteered under the call of July 1, 1862, for 300,000 men. Gathered personally by their officers to be, two companies each were formed in Rockingham, Hillsborough, and Strafford counties; and one each in Grafton, Merrimack, Carroll, and Coös — all coming into Camp Colby, near Concord, between September 11 and 15. The muster-in of the rank and file was completed on September 20, and of the field and staff, with the exception of Assistant-Surgeon John Sullivan, on September 23. The colors were received on the afternoon of October 5; and at the same time a military outfit, including Springfield rifles, muzzle-loading, calibre 58.

Space does not admit fairly of extended mention of individuals. This was at first almost wholly a regiment of native Americans and of New Hampshire's representative young men, many of them lineal descendants of the patriots of 1776 who fought in the Revolution. The average age was a little under twenty-five years, average height five feet and eight inches, and the most were of the dark blonde type. Its companies were fellow townsmen, and its members were in almost every trade and calling — many of whom, too, since the war closed, have gained prominent positions, commercial, professional, and in the Legislatures of States and Nation. The detachments, at the front, of its officers and men, upon special and staff duties, because of their intelligence and efficiency, were very numerous — exceeding that of any regiment near and associated with it in the service.

The Thirteenth was at Camp Colby from September 11–15 to 4 A. M. of October 6; then moved by rail via Nashua and Worcester to Allyn's Point on the Thames river; thence by steamer to Jersey City; thence by rail — cattle cars — via Philadelphia and Baltimore to Washington, arriving there at 9.30 P. M. of October 8, and bivouacking upon the Capitol grounds; thence at 2.15 P. M. of October 9, marched via Long Bridge to Camp Chase on Arlington Heights, arriving there at 6 P. M., and spending the frosty night upon wet ground and without tents or cover. Here it was assigned to the First Brigade, five regiments, Col. Dexter R. Wright, of Gen. Silas Casey's Provisional Division, known as the Defenses of Washington. At 7 A. M. of October 17 marched to Upton's Hill, and, the distant enemy threatening and noisy, to the outer picket lines beyond Falls Church, returning to Camp Chase on the afternoon of October 19, and there was continuously engaged in drill, intrenching, and guarding Long Bridge and the Potomac shore. Marched, November 1, to Camp Casey, near Fairfax Seminary, arriving at 3 P. M. Here the drill, under regular army officers, was most exacting and continued at long hours in all weathers, while the general labor and duties were very severe.

The regiment marched, at 2 P. M. of December 1, via Washington, through Maryland to Liverpool Point on the Potomac river, arriving there at 11.30 A. M. of December 6 — a seventy-mile march by 15,000 men. Crossing the river the regiment debarked at Aquia Creek at 8.30 P. M. of December 6, and bivouacked without tents or cover, in deep snow, and in weather below zero, at "Camp Freeze-to-Death." Marched thence at 2 P. M. of December 9 to Phillips House; arriving there at noon of December 10, was assigned to the First Brigade, six regiments, Col. Rush C. Hawkins; Third Division, Gen. George W. Getty; Ninth Army Corps, Gen. O. B. Wilcox; Right Grand Division, Gen. E. V. Sumner; Army of the Potomac, Gen. Ambrose E. Burnside.

The regiment was in the battle line on Stafford Heights at 8.30 A. M. of December 11; moved forward at 6.20 P. M., crossed the river on the central ponton bridge, and entered the city of Fredericksburg at 8 P. M. This (First) was the first entire brigade to enter the city, the Thirteenth being the second regiment of it in the column. Remaining in the city until 8 A. M. of December 13, the Thirteenth moved to the river bank for the day, having while here several men wounded by the artillery cross-fire, Federal and Confederate, going on overhead.

At 4.30 P. M. of this day, the Thirteenth left the river bank to join in Gen. George W. Getty's night assault, made about 6 P. M., upon the rebel batteries of nine guns — with many more in near support — intrenched on the southwest angle of Marye's Heights. Fronting these batteries, as a deep moat, was the famous sunken road with two stone walls — "a road twenty-five feet wide, sunk four feet deep, and lined with stone walls" — now used by the rebels as a rifle-trench, and manned by riflemen arrayed to fire four ranks deep — several thousand of them, with other thousands within close range. The First Brigade — assaulting alone — almost gained the outer stone bank wall, when they heard the rebel order to fire, instantly followed by stream on stream of dazzling rifle and cannon flashes — an impenetrable fire, but high. The First Brigade thus came within less than one hundred feet of this road, its stone walls, and their defenders — a fact proved by the position of the dead of the Thirteenth. The regiment lost forty-two officers and men killed and wounded. After more than half an hour the column withdrew to near the city until morning. At dark of December 15 the Thirteenth having been stationed with part of the brigade as rear guard for the army, held the outer picket lines until and during the retreat across the river, and was itself with-drawn at 3.30 A. M. of December 16, and crossed the river at 4 A. M., excepting companies B, C, and H, which still longer held an advanced point.

The camp near and north of the Phillips House was now reoccupied. The Thirteenth was engaged in drill, intrenching, and outpost duties, — on December 25 having less than four hundred men fit for duty out of the 1,040 well men who left Concord eighty days before, — until 4.30 P. M. of February 7, 1863, when it moved by rail to Aquia Creek; thence by steamer to Newport News, debarking there with the Ninth Army Corps at noon of February 9.

Gen. George W. Getty's division, 8,000 men, was later hurried over to Suffolk, Va., to re-enforce Gen. John A. Peck, having 9,000 men, the Thirteenth arriving there at 6.30 P. M. of March 13. Soon came on the siege by General Longstreet with a force of 40,000 men — the work of the Thirteenth in it pressed to the utmost from the morning of April 10 to May 4, when Longstreet withdrew. On the afternoon of April 30 camp was moved from Suffolk to Jericho Point, three miles below. Leaving there at 6 A. M. of May 3, the Thirteenth and brigade crossed the Nansemond river over the Providence Church Road bridge, in Suffolk, and under a severe rebel fire gained a position about one mile north of the city. Two brigades crossed with cavalry and artillery. At 1 P. M., under the direction in person of General Getty, the Thirteenth — less than 500 men — commanded by Lt. Col. George Bowers, and the Eighty-ninth New York of about equal strength, with two other Union regiments one fourth of a mile to their right, dashed at full speed across an open field four hundred yards in width, in a bayonet charge upon the rebel intrenchments on and near that road, manned by two rebel regiments supported by artillery, routing them, capturing some and chasing the rest to a large earthwork nearly a mile farther in the forest. In this most spirited and gallant affair the Thirteenth's loss in the charge was twenty-three officers and men killed and wounded. After dark the Union troops withdrew to the south side of the river.

After a few days spent in the Dismal Swamp, the Thirteenth, on May 17, occupied Camp Bowers at Getty's Station, Va., and was there engaged in chopping, intrenching, and picket duty until midnight of June 21, when it marched to Portsmouth — three miles — and embarked for Yorktown, debarked there at midnight of June 22 and encamped. At 3 A. M. of July 1 marched up the Peninsula with about 12,000 troops under Gen. John A. Dix, purposing to destroy bridges and otherwise hinder General Lee's retreat from Gettysburg — and arrived at Littlepage's bridge about 10 A. M. of July 4. Remained there with a few other troops until 9.30 A. M. of July 5, thence as rear guard of the expedition began the return march — for the most part a forced march — from 5.30 P. M. of July 5 until arrival at White House at noon of July 7. Thence at 6 A. M. of July 8, marched, as convoy of teams, to Hampton, crossed to Portsmouth, and arrived at Camp Bowers at 11 P. M. of July 13. This march — "The Blackberry Raid" — of over 160 miles in twelve hot days, reduced half the Thirteenth to the sick list, and caused it heavy losses by deaths and discharges.

Following June 18 of this year the Thirteenth was for some time in a brigade commanded by Col. W. H. P. Steere of the Fourth Rhode Island, Third Brigade, five regiments, Second Division, Seventh Army Corps. Moved a short distance on August 20 to Camp Gilmore; worked for many weeks on the heavy intrenchments; companies B and D served in forts as artillerymen; above one hundred men and officers were provost guards in Norfolk; over sixty men entered the navy; and twenty more, able and ambitious, were promoted to officers in colored regiments. One hundred and eighty-one recruits were received October 4, 1863, and sixty-four more January 31, 1864. Three hundred and ninety members of the Thirteenth and Tenth regiments between March 4 and 18, visited New Hampshire to vote.

April 19, 1864, at 9 A. M., the Thirteenth broke camp; crossed to Newport News; marched next day for Yorktown, arriving there at 10 A. M. of April 21; and as part of more than 38,000 troops to operate south of Richmond, joined the Second Brigade, four regiments, Gen. Hiram Burnham; First Division, Gen. W. H. F. Brooks; Eighteenth Army Corps, Gen. W. F. Smith; Army of the James, Gen. Benjamin F. Butler. At 4 A. M. of May 4, the Thirteenth embarked, joined the immense transport flotilla, and debarked at Bermuda Hundred a little after midnight of May 5.

May 6, at 6 A. M., the Thirteenth, Col. A. F. Stevens commanding, with the division, proceeded to near Port Walthall, and there engaged in a severe fight on both May 6 and 7; and in another, still more severe, from 5 A. M. of May 9 to late at night of May 10, at Swift Creek, losing hereabouts nine officers and men killed and wounded. At 7 A. M. of May 12, advanced towards Richmond, losing several men that day at Proctor's Creek, and still others in a sharp contest on May 13 at Kingsland Creek,—in a word, was engaged half a dozen times in the week's running fight, through swamp, mud, and brush, until by a sudden onset about 7 A. M. of May 14 the enemy's line of works at Drewry's Bluff were captured with the bayonet, the Thirteenth taking a large part of them and soon reversing the same for defense.

Now General Butler's force here was about 20,000 men, and General Beauregard, with above 20,000 men, suddenly assaulted, at 3.30 A. M. of May 16, in a dense fog—successful at the James, and sweeping the line to the turnpike. Here, still before daylight, he struck the Thirteenth and its brigade, drawn out to a single line and without support; but they forced back the thrice repeated and mad onslaughts of his troops—closed compactly in masses, the lightest six ranks deep—and here the Thirteenth and Tenth, in all less than 1,000 men, held their ground as a rock, and that, too, for two hours after the rest of the brigade had retired. Then, after 9 A. M., their ammunition expended (having fired from eighty to one hundred rounds per man), they were peremptorily ordered back; obeying sullenly, angry and indignant, they slowly retired down the turnpike as rear guard there of the Eighteenth Corps, and early in the evening went into camp at Bermuda Hundred, excepting Company E (Thirteenth), which fought upon an outpost until after dark, and arrived in camp at 10.30 P. M. The Thirteenth captured fifty-nine prisoners, and lost but eight officers and men killed and wounded.

From this followed the hurried intrenching and continuous battle and siege at Bermuda Hundred (Front), until, at 11 A. M. of May 27, the Thirteenth moved to the James; embarked at 8 A. M. of May 29, and debarked at White House at 8 P. M. of May 30, as part of 16,000 men of the Eighteenth and Tenth corps. May 31, at 4.15 P. M., with 13,500 men, marched to Cold Harbor—made by mistake a march of thirty-five miles—arriving there, joining on the right of the Sixth Corps, and coming under a sharp fire of the enemy at 1 P. M. of June 1. This column—25,000 men of the Sixth, Tenth, and Eighteenth corps—charged at 6 P. M. the enemy's works, just at the left of Allerson's road, very heavily manned with infantry and artillery, capturing with the bayonet alone his first line with about six hundred prisoners—the first infantry charge of the battle. The Thirteenth, Colonel Stevens commanding, was the right regiment in the front line of both the assaulting column and of the brigade, division, and Eighteenth Corps, and its loss in five minutes, from a front and flank fire, was sixty-seven officers and men killed and wounded.

During the Union charge "all along the line" here at 4.30 A. M. of June 3, when 10,000 Union men were shot down in less than twenty minutes, the Thirteenth closely followed the charging columns in, a little before 5 A. M. June 3, also, the Thirteenth, with its division and a total of over 20,000 men, formed in mass—thirty-two ranks deep—waited from about 11 A. M. to after 4 P. M. for the signal to storm the enemy's near and heaviest intrenchments. During these five hours thirteen officers and men of the Thirteenth were killed and wounded. June 4 at early morning it occupied an advanced hill-top and angle, losing several men and having its flags and their staffs torn to pieces by the enemy's fire. This was its special "front," where it remained, with alternate days of rest, though all the time under fire, even losing several men in the extreme rear trenches, until 12.45 of June 12, when, with the Eighteenth Corps, it was hurried to White House, arriving there at 7 P. M. ; embarked there at 10 A. M. of June 13, and debarked at Point of Rocks at evening of June 14.

June 15, at 2.30 A. M., the Thirteenth approached the Petersburg front, skirmishing all day in advance of its division. Between 6 and 7 P. M. the Thirteenth, having but one hundred and eighty-nine muskets present and while widely deployed as skirmishers, was ordered, first of the Union line, to charge upon the enemy in "French" rifle-pits in front of their main works ; it drove them out, capturing a part and chasing the rest into the rebel Battery Five, located on a high bluff near the City Point road. In this rush about a dozen of the officers and men—among them Captains Goss, Julian, Stoodley, and Smith—ran into the ravine serving as a moat for this battery, a position where, if attacked and unsupported, capture by the enemy was nearly certain ; but after a moment's consultation, the little party climbed the battery's high walls, sprang down among the astonished defenders—standing to their guns shotted for an expected column of infantry—and demanded instant surrender. This sudden and most audacious demand was obeyed. The regiment soon rushed in ; and thus the Thirteenth, as a skirmish line and alone, captured and held this strong battery and all there was in it, viz., five pieces of field artillery, two rebel battle-flags, and above one hundred and twenty-five prisoners. This was good fortune, and also the first breach there made in the enemy's line, and the first blow struck in the siege of Petersburg. The State of New Hampshire still preserves the two battle-flags. The Thirteenth lost in the assault forty-six officers and men killed and wounded.

June 17, at 7 P. M., the Thirteenth moved over to Bermuda Hundred, but back again at 3 A. M. of June 21, and was placed at the extreme right of the Union front line where it abuts upon the Appomatox river. Remaining along this front until 7 P. M. of July 29, the Thirteenth then moved to the scene of the Mine Explosion—engineered by Gen. A. E. Burnside—which occurred at 4.40 A. M. of July 30 ; soon after 10 A. M. was placed in the front intrenchment where the shaft of the Mine opened, five hundred feet from the Mine excavation ; and there remained until night of July 31, when it returned to the Appomatox, where it arrived at 11 P. M., and was engaged without relief for one stretch of thirteen days and twelve nights ; thence on until 10 P. M. of August 26, when it returned to the Bermuda Hundred front, arriving there at 3.30 A. M. of August 27.

The Thirteenth remained here until 8 A. M. of September 28, when, leaving Company C as garrison of redoubt McConihe, it marched to Aiken's Landing, joining there 4,000 men under Gen. E. O. C. Ord. Crossing the James at 3 A. M. of September 29, and moving along the Varina road for about six miles, it engaged in the storming of Fort Harrison. This assault, made between 7 and 8 A. M. by about 2,000 men, including the Thirteenth, of Gen. George J. Stannard's First Division, Eighteenth Corps, through a mile of open ground, resulted in the capture—by the bayonet alone—of the works, with eight heavy cannon and many prisoners. The loss amounted to over one fourth of General Stannard's division, and in the Thirteenth—present one hundred and eighty-seven muskets—of fifty-five officers and men killed and wounded. Col. A. F. Stevens, commanding First Brigade, was wounded, and the Thirteenth's entire color guard—six men—were struck down.

About noon of September 30, the Thirteenth, now a total of ninety-three, was placed in an open field, with the division, and here withstood the enemy's fierce and repeated assaults in heavy columns, backed by artillery, made between 1 and 7 P. M., to recapture Fort Harrison. This was a regular stand-up fight without cover, but the enemy was beaten back at all points. The Thirteenth's loss in the two days was eighty-one killed and wounded.

Remaining on this front until dark of October 26, the Thirteenth then moved out for the Battle of Fair Oaks (No. 2). At 5 A. M. of October 27, the regiment on the skirmish line advanced to and along the Williamsburg road. Several assaults were made by two other brigades of Union troops upon the enemy's works four miles from Richmond. The Thirteenth lost several officers and men. Among the killed was Capt. E. W. Goss, commanding the First Division Sharpshooters, a corps of two hundred men, and all but ten of these were lost. Withdrawn about 8 P. M., the regiment halted a while near the rebel Fort Lee, and arrived at Fort Harrison at dark of October 28.

December 3 the Thirteenth was assigned to the First Brigade, six regiments, Lieut. Col. John B. Raulston ; Third Division, Gen. Charles Devens ; Twenty-fourth Army Corps (the right corps, now, of General Grant's army), Gen. E. O. C. Ord, and after January 8, 1865, Gen. John Gibbon, General Ord being raised to the command of Army of the James. December 27, 1864, the regiment received a new

United States flag, with a list of its battles inscribed thereon; and March 19, 1865, received new arms for all its men then present for duty, one hundred and twelve Sharps carbines — breech-loading — in place of the Springfield rifles.

Soon after daylight on the morning of April 3, 1865, the Thirteenth left the outer Union line, at the New Market Road crossing, and, leading its brigade, marched with all possible speed for and into Richmond, arriving to find that city deluged in turmoil, riot, ruin, and raging fire. The movements of the previous night, and the definite official assignments of this morning's hot haste, chase, and advance, all resulted in these several honors and duties of the Thirteenth Regiment: Capt. William J. Ladd, on the staff of General Devens, commanding Third Division, was the first Union officer; the First Brigade pickets, about one hundred men now advancing as skirmishers under command of Lieut. Royal B. Prescott, were the first Union troops; the Thirteenth, commanded by Maj. Nathan D. Stoodley, was the first Union regiment; and the flags of the Thirteenth, its new United States flag, received last December, and its New Hampshire state flag, were the first flags of the Union army, — to enter Richmond on this eventful and long-awaited morning. And more: During the advance this morning, by order of General Devens, Capt. Rufus P. Staniels, then an aide on his staff, halted all the colored troops at some distance outside of the city, giving entire precedence to the white troops; and Lieut. Col. Normand Smith was appointed the first general officer of the day in Richmond, and soon afterwards provost-marshal. Extract: "Richmond, Va., June 22, 1865. The Thirteenth New Hampshire being the first regiment of the army whose colors were brought into the city of Richmond. (Signed) Charles Devens, Brig. and Brev. Maj. Gen. U. S. V., Comdg." After returning to civil life, General Devens frequently corroborated the above, and asserted that no colored troops entered the city at all that morning, until after the city had been occupied by white troops for several hours.

Immediately after the occupation of the city, the Thirteenth and other troops of its brigade were engaged in restoring order, putting out fires, guarding property, and gathering into Libby prison above two thousand of the straggling and belated soldiers of Gen. R. E. Lee's army. Remaining on duty in Richmond until night of April 13, the Thirteenth then moved to a camp two miles to the north. Engaged in provost, picket, and guard duties in the city and out, until the close of its service, it had the honor, with its division, in May, to receive and welcome the homing columns of Gen. Wm. T. Sherman's and other armies of the Union, some 200,000 men, as they passed through Richmond.

The Thirteenth leaving the Broad Rock Road Camp, sailed down the James river from Richmond at 8 A. M. of June 22, in a provisional brigade, formed of the Tenth, Twelfth, and Thirteenth New Hampshire regiments; arrived in Boston, Mass., at 9 P. M. of June 25; was quartered in Faneuil Hall; left by rail at 9 A. M. of June 26; arrived at Nashua at noon, having a reception and passing the night there; was given a public dinner at Manchester on the 27th; and reaching Concord between 6 and 7 P. M. on that day, had a parade and review in the streets. The Thirteenth disbanded about 5 P. M. of July 1, having on its rolls then but 321 officers and men out of the 1,285 who had stood in its battle line.

The Thirteenth served in the Defenses of Washington, and in Ninth, Seventh, Eighteenth and Twenty-fourth army corps. The actual number of its engagements was above twenty, not to mention days and days of skirmishing, picket-firing, and intrenching. No one of its officers deserted, was reprimanded, cashiered, or dismissed the service; and it maintained by its acts that character for efficiency, patriotism, intelligence, bravery, and trustworthiness, which made it surely one of the American Nation's most prominent historic regiments.
